The Hôtel de Païva, whose façade on the Champs Élysées is barely noticeable, is one of the most beautiful examples of private architecture and interior decoration under Napoleon III. It is due to the triumphant rise of one of the most noted adventurers of the 19th century: the Marquise de Païva.

Let's follow in the footsteps of the most adulated courtesan of the Second Empire. I will tell you her story, her famous affairs, her beauty secrets.

The private mansion, which took ten years to build, now welcomes businessmen from all over the world, members of the very private Travellers Club.

During the visit, I will show you the decoration of the ostentatiously luxurious lounges where marble and gilding are abundant, the superb onyx staircase as well as the silver-plated bronze bathtub.

What if Paris had a smell? For some, "Paris smells of honey", "the RER B platform", "the Luxembourg gardens" and for you?

Did you like Patrick Süskind's novel? You will love this perfumed and creative walk, the first visit in "odorama" to smell and feel the air of Paris with real perfume essences. They say that Parisians have a nose. Do like the hero of the book Jean-Baptiste Grenouille and discover the lively and enticing olfactory landscape of the largest reserve of odors in the world: the city of Paris in the 18th century.

This unique experience-tour invites you to relive the plot of the famous novel in the magical center of the capital. You follow in the footsteps of the genius from the popular district of Les Halles to the Bourgeois Paris of Saint-Germain-des-Près. Immerse yourself in the scents of wig powder, carriage leather, tuberose in the carriage entrances... Inhale the fetid odors of the cemetery of the Innocents and the whiffs of the tanneries on the banks of the Seine. Finally, discover the arrogant voluptuousness of rococo perfumes...

This visit will continue in the workshop of a Parisian perfumer in a private apartment on the Ile Saint-Louis. Embark on an olfactory journey of 1h30. You will discover the mysteries of distillation and then train your nose to new scents. You will select those that you like the most and you will create, like the brilliant Jean-Baptiste Grenouille, your own perfume: a unique perfume, the one that suits you!

22, rue du Faubourg Saint-Honoré... The legendary address of the Lanvin house, symbol of femininity and elegance, is today a prestigious brand recognized throughout the world. Jeanne Lanvin, a visionary designer, was also an exceptional woman. Born in 1867, she decided from her childhood to turn her destiny towards the fashion world. A milliner at 16, she developed a passion for hats. She quickly opened her own workshop and in 1925, she already employed more than 800 seamstresses.

This visit invites you to discover a lesser-known side of the seamstress: her taste for interior decoration.

In 1920, Jeanne Lanvin bought the former private mansion of the Marquise Arconati-Visconti, 16 rue Barbet-de-Jouy. She had a reception wing built whose rooms were designed by Armand-Albert Rateau. In the 1920s, this decorator developed a very particular style that arose from his interest in ancient art and the use of an original bestiary.

The three rooms of Jeanne Lanvin's private apartment, also decorated by Rateau in 1924-1925, illustrate a very personal luxury with its furniture in bronze with an antique patina, in oak or in gilded wood.

The visit will continue with the discovery of the "art deco" collections at the MAD (Musée des Arts Décoratifs)

Alongside them, the couturiers Frédéric Worth, Coco Chanel, Jacques Doucet, Jeanne Paquin and Paul Poiret made the coveted French elegance shine. Their creations, which combined audacity and tradition, called upon all the finesse of an exceptional Haute-couture.

A few steps further, the streets of Paix, Castiglione and Cambon have seen famous clients, icons of their eras: Marcel Proust, Charles Baudelaire, Jean Cocteau, Sarah Bernhardt, or Françoise Sagan...

Title : The legendary house of Dior

vendorId : 66c0548ebfc9145a5302d52e

description :

Dior, a name that rhymes with prestige, perfection and elegance. In the 50s, Christian Dior signed a fashion revival with his "Corolle" collection and his "New-Look" look. The couturier redesigned the body: high chest, slim waist and blossoming hips. "All of Paris" was stunned by this profusion of fabrics and colors. After a career as a gallery owner, illustrator and then model maker for the house of Lelong, he launched his own brand in February 1947. In just seven months, he created a collection that became the showcase of his boutique. Dior aimed for perfection, refused to restrict himself. For him, the dress is the ephemeral architecture intended to exalt the body of women. The gifted designer teamed up with Michel Boussac, the "king of cotton", to design increasingly long dresses; he gave women back their frivolity. At the end of the 1940s, the discreet man established himself as the new messiah of fashion. He was the first couturier to make the cover of Time magazine. His brand became the essential reference in terms of luxury and French chic.

During this visit, we will focus on the store at 30 avenue Montaigne. His boutique, which has become legendary, was inspired by his birthplace in Granville. This family home with its understated elegance would still inspire his perfume "Miss Dior". Today, the Hôtel Dior is still part of this heritage.

For all fashion enthusiasts, come and meet the illustrious couturier with his unique creations, and discover the secrets of the house of Dior, synonymous with renewal, beauty and escape.

Il était une fois Gabrielle Chanel, une jeune femme qui masqua ses origines paysannes et créa sa propre légende Haute-couture, aidée par "Boy" Capel, son amour britannique. Symbole de l'élégance à la française dans le monde, Coco Chanel brisa les codes et libéra les corps de la femme moderne.

Fondée en 1910, la maison Chanel créa la nouvelle silhouette féminine, une révolution stylistique. Les chevilles devinrent apparentes, la taille délivrée du corset, la peau bronzée, les cheveux coupés. Au cœur des années folles, la jeune créatrice redessina la silhouette de la parisienne : la tenue « sportswear chic », la fameuse petite robe noire et sa fragrance audacieuse Chanel « n°5 ». Ces pièces résistaient aux modes et au temps qui passe, la sobriété devint le gage de l'indémodable. La visite s'intéressera de plus près aux secrets de la rue Cambon, dans la maison Chanel, l'adresse parisienne où Coco posa ses valises en 1918 avant de s'installer au Ritz Place Vendôme où elle s'éteignit en 1971.

Retraçons l'histoire de la marque Chanel, des créations de Coco aux mythiques tailleurs de Karl Lagerfeld.

Nous aborderons également l'aspect contemporain de la marque par Virginie Viard, nouvelle créatrice de la maison Chanel. Redécouvrons cette maison de prestige et du luxe à la française.

"The most beautiful garment that can dress a woman is the arms of the man she loves. But, for those who have not had the chance to find this happiness, I am here."

Meet this visionary artist, born in Algeria in 1936 and trained with the great Christian Dior. Yves-Saint-Laurent succeeded him at only 21 years old. He then enjoyed considerable success by founding his own brand, accompanied by Pierre Bergé, the love of his life.

From there, his first collections and his first fashion show were born in 1962 with his "Trapèze" dress. Feminist and committed, he designed the famous women's tuxedo, inspired by the men's wardrobe. His collections aroused interest in the midst of the sexual revolution. His avant-garde style liberated the woman's body: she was, in his eyes, conquering and rebellious, like Catherine Deneuve. The actress became his muse and his great friend. Keen to democratize fashion, he launched his ready-to-wear line in 1966. Provocative, he designed his "Libération" collection in the 1970s, inspired by years of war. It caused a scandal and was violently criticized by the press. It still leaves its mark today. Decorated and Oscar-winning, he passed away in 2008 from a tumor. A look back at the unique career of this gifted designer at the Yves Saint Laurent Museum, the historic site of his former fashion house from 1974 to 2002. Come and admire the wealth of heritage preserved by the Pierre Bergé Foundation in the original atmosphere of the brand through thematic exhibitions that reflect the creative genius and the manufacturing process of the Haute Couture collections.

Who are the walkers along the banks of the Seine who know about this exceptional residence?

Behind the heavy doors of number 17 Quai d'Anjou lies an architectural gem. Composed of a series of rooms with gilded decorations and ceilings comparable to those of the Château de Vaux-le-Vicomte.

The Hôtel de Lauzun, built in 1657 for the financier Charles Grūyn des Bordes, preserves the best-preserved reception apartment of the Grand Siècle. This Parisian "Little Versailles" houses a unique set of opulent decorations with a thousand fancies.

This exclusive private visit takes you into a place rarely open to the public. I will reveal its decorations to you: its superb balcony in gilded wrought iron, its main courtyard and its sundial, the main staircase, its splendid apartment in a row...

I will tell you its historical secrets: the financial intrigues of the court of Louis XIV; the orgies of the Duke of Lauzun, adventurer and lover of the king's cousin La Grande Mademoiselle; the "artificial paradises" of Charles Baudelaire and the crazy evenings of the Haschichins club.

Visitors looking through the central window in the Hall of Mirrors will see the Grande Perspective stretching away towards the horizon from the Water Parterre. This unique east-west perspective originally dates from before the reign of Louis XIV, but it was developed and extended by the gardener André Le Nôtre, who widened the Royal Way and dug the Grand Canal.

In 1661 Louis XIV entrusted André Le Nôtre with the creation and renovation of the gardens of Versailles, which he considered just as important as the Palace. Work on the gardens was started at the same time as the work on the palace and lasted for 40 or so years. During this time André Le Nôtre collaborated with the likes of Jean-Baptiste Colbert, Superintendent of Buildings to the King from 1664 to 1683, who managed the project, and Charles Le Brun, who was made First Painter to the King in January 1664 and provided the drawings for a large number of the statues and fountains. Last but not least, each project was reviewed by the King himself, who was keen to see "every detail". Not long after, the architect Jules Hardouin-Mansart, having been made First Architect to the King and Superintendent of Buildings, built the Orangery and simplified the outlines of the Park, in particular by modifying or opening up some of the groves.

Creating the gardens was a monumental task. Large amounts of soil had to be shifted to level the ground, create parterres, build the Orangery and dig out the fountains and Canal in places previously occupied solely by meadows and marshes. Trees were brought in from different regions of France. Thousands of men, sometimes even entire regiments, took part in this immense project.

Discover the palace's majestic gardens during a VIP visit aided by one of the head gardeners of the palace and get the privilege of accessing what regular visitors can't access.

vendorId : 66017c8558cd005ba7eb4781

description :

Inspired by the American Declaration of Independence in 1776 and the spirit of the Enlightenment, the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen of 1789 marked the beginning of a new political era. Since then, it has never ceased to be a reference text.

The French Republic explicitly states its attachment to it, citing it in the preamble of its Constitution, and the Constitutional Council recognized its constitutional value in 1971.

The Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen came into existence in the summer of 1789, born of an idea of the Constituent Assembly, which was formed by the assembly of the Estates General to draft a new Constitution, and precede it with a declaration of principles. There were many proposals. The Constituent Assembly tasked five deputies – Démeunier, La Luzerne, Tronchet, Mirabeau et Redon – with examining the various draft declarations, combining them into a single one and presenting it to the Assembly. Article by article, the French declaration was voted on between 20 and 26 August 1789. In its preamble and its 17 articles, it sets out the “natural and inalienable” rights, which are freedom, ownership, security, resistance to oppression; it recognizes equality before the law and the justice system, and affirms the principle of separation of powers.

During this highly exclusive experience, you will get the rare privilege of seeing the original of the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen, as well as several authentic preparatory drafts and historical documents. These documents are not just a treasure of France but of mankind.

Whether one feels for Marie or not, one must admit her trial was a mockery of justice. Inhabitants of Kurna originally found the papyrus inside the rishi coffin of pharaoh Sekhemre-Wepmaat Intef of the 17th Dynasty, whose tomb was probably located in Dra' Abu el-Naga' near Thebes. The papyrus document contains the last two pages of the Instructions of Kagemni, who purportedly served under pharaoh Sneferu of the 4th Dynasty, and is a compilation of moral maxims and admonitions on the practice of virtue (sebayt). The conclusion of the Instructions of Kagemni is followed by the only complete surviving copy of the Instruction of Ptahhotep.

Let yourself be seduced by a narrated walk in the heart of a Parisian district...

The capital is full of secret corners, preserved from time and crowds: these districts with a country feel, their poorly paved streets, their alleys flanked by original little houses and their private gardens. During a walk, I will tell you along the streets, the monuments, all the events, the walks, and all the little anecdotes that have made the history of the district... We will take the time to stop on a detail, the name of a street, a setting, a personality...

You can choose among many classic options such as Saint-Germain-des-Pres, Le Marais, The Islands, the Latin Quarter, but also some off-the-beaten-path such as Pigalle, the Goutte d'Or, Chinatown and many more.

In the rue de Lappe in the 1920s, some strange guys hung around the neighborhood... They were the "Apaches": bandits, crooks. At the "Bastoches", these bad boys were living their hour of glory. They spent their days between various schemes, swindles and other settling of scores. This original guided tour tells you the story of the gangs of Paris and the sordid past of the Bastille district.

In dark corners, discover the little-known life of the guys from the Milieu, the tough guys, the real ones, the tattooed ones! At the Bal de la boule rouge and the Balajo, the gangsters danced to musette rhythms. The guys were dressed like lords, their hair shiny with their elegant borsalino. They twirled their "femme fatales" to the sound of the accordion. Immerse yourself in the atmosphere of these shady circles.

Our tour will end in a confidential Speakeasy with some cocktails.

Let's venture into the impasse of Square du Docteur Blanche, in the 16th arrondissement. At the end of a leafy alley, hides a modern building with a white facade: the Maison La Roche. Built between 1923 and 1925, it is the work of the architect Le Corbusier and Pierre Jeanneret. You will appreciate its clean lines, far from the usual refinement of Haussmannian buildings, but which have nevertheless brought a new breath of life to the history of Parisian architecture.

Its owner, the art lover Raoul La Roche, wanted a large living space to be able to display his rich collection of cubist and purist paintings. His friend Le Corbusier then proposed an innovative architectural project to him. He decided to use new materials, such as reinforced concrete and chose simple geometric shapes. His work is part of the Modern Movement and the house was classified as a Historic Monument in 1996. Lovers of art and architecture, you will feel at home here.
